While that might have made the community feel included and connected to the project, it also meant that we couldn’t “finish” the project – there were always something else to be added and more to be considered. That was hard on many levels – for us, for the project creator, and on many levels for the community. We decided to end our efforts on 1.2.1, which is when it became clear we were operating as a small, independent team with a lot of other work and interests to tend to, rather than as a large, distributed developer community working in a distributed team. We have already committed ourselves to work on Drupal 8
