The Extinction Rebellion movement in San Francisco launched a "Week of Disruption" at 2 p.m. today.They organized a small blockade on Market Street, just off 3rd Street, in what they described as a "low-stakes" attempt to draw attention to the "systemic threats" posed by climate change.Many wore matching t-shirts reading "Free speech for the delicious children" and "The Extinction War will be won with or without you." Some handed out free popcorn to passersby.But a handful of protesters, dressed in black and waving a flag with a black butterfly on it, refused to leave the staging area outside the Starbucks on Market until they'd met with one of the movement's co-founders, Gail Harrison, an organizer who spoke with The Bold Italic for about 20 minutes.Harrison thanked protesters for their presence, and then described how San Francisco's climate crisis is different from global warming in other cities — in that, even though temperatures are rising, the city is already warming at one to two times the pace of the global average.San Francisco has a stricter building code, which means there's not a lot of new housing in the city — there's also been a population shift to the East Bay, where people are not contributing carbon emissions.Harrison argued that residents in San Francisco don't have to buy into a "growth state ideology" in order to be spared from climate change. "There is a way," she said, "that we can live in San Francisco in a way that is very high carbon free and still have our social lives, and our religious lives and our cultural lives."Harrison said that the ultimate goal of Extinction Rebellion is to promote a "democratic rebellion" that would put people in power who would protect them from climate change.When asked about the intensity and duration of the protests, which began in London in May, Harrison said the goal is to keep things small and nonviolent, with three or four days of blockades and actions."We want to show up, and be a nuisance in public," she said. "But we think it's going to be for months, 1cdb36666d

The invention relates to a process and apparatus for inspecting a substrate, particularly glass, using scattering patterns. Conventional glass inspection takes place by passing a glass substrate through the path of a light beam, either a laser beam or radiation from a source. The light beam is reflected from the surface of the glass and detected and analyzed to determine if defects exist. A problem with this procedure is that the substrate can be passing through the light beam so rapidly that the light beam reflects only once from the substrate, which is insufficient to obtain a usable signal. It is an object of the present invention to provide a process and apparatus for inspecting a substrate which obtains more representative scattering patterns. * @param relativeName corresponding to the absoluteName (base path) * @return the FileEntry with the absoluteName of the last modification (any location, not the root location) */ public FileEntry getLastModifiedFileEntry(String relativeName) { FileEntry normalizedRootPath = FileUt
