Field of the Invention This invention relates to the combination of a self-propelled barge and shipping container for use with such large size cargo which is not readily handled by self-propelled barges.2. Description of the Prior Art In recent years there has been significant interest in using the self-propelled floating barges for shipping containers in order to replace much of the ship container traffic. The self-propelled barges offer the advantage of eliminating the need for a ship to tender, since the barge can be landed at the site of the unloading. Further, the barge is equipped with an all weather cargo deck and usually has an unloading ramp so that the cargo can be off-loaded into the transportation medium easily.
