The following is an overview of some of the innovations introduced by this technology. Motion Capture and Virtual Player The movement of player in the game is calculated from real-life data captured by the player in a motion capture suit. This motion capture data provides a more realistic representation of player movement and provides a greater range of movement and variety of movement. For example, when collecting motion capture data during a match, the player's movement tends to be more natural and smooth. In contrast, when using typical development software, movements tend to be more chaotic and unrealistic. This realism is further supported by the more expressive animation of player movements in the game. The need to enable players to create their own player models has also been significantly reduced. A motion capture suit allows players to access the maximum range of movement, including walking and running. Motion capture suits are also used in real-time multiplayer gameplay to ensure that the player's animations (run, jump, shoot, kick) are in sync with other players. The collection of motion capture data is also used to recreate players in different environments. For example, players can be created in the real-life field, street, stadium or indoor environment. Developers can define player kits, sleeves, uniforms, and other items for the players. They can also define player attributes, such as stamina, fitness, speed, and acceleration. Various attributes can be combined to define a player's match performance. The technology also allows for dynamic training simulations. In FIFA 22, players can record a trial run and their actions will be evaluated based on how realistically the player's movement is represented. For example, a player can collect the data in a virtual training mode before facing a similar opposition in a real match. There are more than 100 motion capture suits in FIFA 22. The combination of the movement data collected from the motion capture suits, together with the player avatar in the game (i.e. real-life player), provides comprehensive movement analysis and allows for the simulation of a complete match. FIFA 22 introduces the 'Match Day' system that gives the player the ability to watch a full match in real-time. The match can be watched from different camera angles. This is designed to help players get a real sense of how the match unfolds in the virtual environment. The 'Match Day' feature is available via a free update to FIFA Ultimate Team.

**FIFA** FIFA (from FIFA soccer, the official videogame of football, or soccer) is a sports video game series published by Electronic Arts which was created by the gaming studio EA Canada. The series, which began with FIFA 4 in 1994, has since become the world's most popular and popular videogame in the genre of sports simulation games. FIFA is the seventh title in the series and the third iteration of the game to be developed by EA Canada. The third iteration was also the first to be developed using the Frostbite game engine. FIFA is the official videogame of football (soccer), the sport played predominantly in Europe, South America and Africa. The series also includes the related video games "FIFA Club World Cup" and "FIFA World Cup Qualifiers" as well as the mobile title "FIFA Mobile".

Gameplay FIFA 22 The game mode is more similar to the actual format of the sport. You can also compete in multiple modes such as Exhibition, International Friendly, Leagues, Cup, Regular Season and Playoffs. A number of new features have been added, such as the new 3D transfer market, a more realistic run system and player characteristics, such as slowing down the pace of a player and making him more difficult to pass through. A new dribbling system allows players to use the ball more effectively by running to the ball instead of sticking close to the player with possession. At certain intervals in the match, you have to use a specific play to pass to a specific person. Attacking players are given a beep if they are marked as being open. Passes can be drifted, which causes a lot more problems to your opponents as compared to previous versions. You will also have the option to control your team using the pitch markings. These markings change according to weather conditions, players movement and overall, of course, the state of the pitch. These markings are one of the major innovations included in FIFA 22, along with all of the other gameplay improvements, as well as the brand new career mode.

Customisation FIFA Customisation in FIFA allows players to set up their own team, based on the actual clubs and players within the game, with players being able to change their attributes including skin colour, hairstyle, fitness, and more. EA also allows players to create their own stadium within the game. They can then add in functionalities
