According to the DOC, gangs have been a "substantial" problem for decades, but in recent years the problem has intensified. At the same time, the information from the DOC shows inmate population growth has been declining for the past five years. Documents released from the DOC show the fastest growing problem behind bars isn't violent, it's a growing problem with sex offenders. From 2003 to 2007, the number of inmates with sex crime convictions grew more than 100 percent. Alaska's only state prison is forced to hire the county where it houses inmates to work with offenders trying to stay out of prison. The State and Municipal Corrections Act authorizes DOC to award grants to states and municipalities for law enforcement and corrections related purposes, in addition to providing funding for other services. The DOC is currently in the process of awarding $8 million to the first four state correctional institutions for programs that focus on security and prevention of escapes. What is the problem? The DOC has been working to tackle the problem of gang violence in prisons, which they estimate costs taxpayers $31 million dollars annually. Gang related activity, including assault and assault with deadly weapons, has increased by 80 percent from 2004 to 2009. The DOC has seen this year in particular, with a 72 percent spike in gang-related activity through September. "Gang activity is a major problem in the DOC," said DOC Warden Jack McKeegan. "We have at least 16 gangs of different colors, ethnicities, and regions that reside in our facilities at any one time." DOC Spokesperson Drew Bartleman said the number of gangs in the prison system has likely increased because of a new law that ended the Alaska gang and prison programs. In 2009 the DOC ended the "
