The secretive organisation's leader stayed only a few hours, but Mr Nasrallah's brief trip on Friday provided rare insight into life inside the government-held Syrian capital and offers an indication of how the conflict could be resolved. His visit came as Syrian activists say government forces fired at least 65 shells into opposition-held districts of Damascus on Friday. But Mr Nasrallah said he had come to discuss the fight against "terrorism" with Assad government officials. Hezbollah has played a key role in the fighting, providing intelligence on rebel groups, and helping the Assad government suppress major opposition strongholds. Mr Nasrallah also announced that a militant group calling itself the 'League of Islamic Forces' has been formed and is fighting in northern Syria. Damascus has been largely quiet since a series of deadly bombings last year, but the opposition has been holding days of protests as it pushes for more representative government. Homs and Eastern Ghouta - where the deadly bombing - have seen serious fighting between government forces and rebels since mid-February. In the past few days, rebels have fired dozens of rockets into Damascus. "We have come to discuss this in Damascus. We do not want to have a battle on the outskirts of Damascus where it is impossible for us to protect Syria's civilians," Mr Nasrallah said before he visited the capital. Syria's foreign ministry has said Hezbollah leader visits are for "religious purposes". Mr Nasrallah is a powerful figure who is revered by many Shiites. He supports Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and has fought on the side of the Syrian government since the crisis began in 2011. The speech in the Hezbollah stronghold of south Lebanon came as two rebels were killed in shelling by Assad forces in several districts of Damascus, activists said. The Local Coordination Committees said government forces fired more than 65 shells into rebel-held areas. The opposition Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said an entire family in the Saqba area of Damascus were killed in the
