Batman.Q: Inline Constraints On-Screen/Animated? This is a fairly general question with a specific objective. But I'll set the stage... The typical way of setting up an Auto Layout programmatically is for a view to declare a certain number of constraints and then... Load that view onto the screen (or initialize a view controller) Take the constraints previously defined and set up the view in code (this is the initial arrangement as the view loads) What I'd like to do is take the constraints previously set and animate their movement into a new arrangement (for example, the constraints would be defined for the buttons and labels on a view as "buttons | 12" and "buttons | 16" respectively. The view is loaded onto the screen and set up by the view controller with "buttons | 16", "buttons | 12", "label1 | 16" and "label1 | 12". After the view loads, I want to animate the buttons and labels to positions "buttons | 24" and "buttons | 12" and "label2 | 24" and "label2 | 12" respectively.) Does anyone know if this is possible? Is it possible to do this in a custom animation block or with an existing storyboard element? And... if not, can someone offer an alternate suggestion? Thank you in advance. A: Turns out this is actually pretty easy. I ended up playing with the constraint based layout for iOS and it made creating the animations and constraints easy. Here's the relevant documentation from UIView.h: `/ @property (nonatomic) BOOL canAddConstraints @discussion A property`
